

TW: Mentions of rape, stalking, sexual/non-sexual harassment, suicide

Hello. I just wanted to give my perspective on the allegations against Wicked and her husband sexually assaulting Daoko. Then I'm leaving this account so I can finally start over as someone with zero connections to Wicked whatsoever.

In February 2022, I was invited to WhoaWickedSins's (now Wicked YB) Writers Guild server. Please keep in mind this was my first Discord experience. In the server, I saw Wicked (the admin) commented on my fic. She said I had a hidden piss kink and she was going to "awaken" it in me. I was uncomfortable that a stranger was speaking about me sexually, so I told my fiancée. I tried to play it off because I thought maybe this was normal in NSFW servers.

Not too long after I'd joined, Wicked found art depicting graphic rape that she liked so much she posted it in the server. I'm fine with non/dub-con, but the appeal stems from the thrill of having a hot, fictional stranger desire you. You're in control of the fantasy and you can step back whenever you need to. This art focused on exerting power over someone else by using sexual violence. It felt too much like a real rape. Looking at it made me physically ill.

Wicked kept bringing it up over the next few days. I eventually mustered up the courage and asked her to please just add trigger warnings or even take it to a separate channel since it was posted/talked about so much. I thought that since Wicked and ShudderShock were admins that they'd hear me out. I wasn't telling people to stop talking about non-con altogether or bashing it. All I asked was if that specific post could be contained somewhere so I didn't keep stumbling on it and feeling sick to my stomach.

I tried to peek in on the server now and then, but all I felt was constant dread when browsing through it. It was like I had to walk on eggshells for fear of saying or doing the wrong thing. I didn't feel like I fit in with everyone else, and the other members slowly stopped engaging with me and my writing, so I began to withdraw.

From what Wicked said, the guild was meant to uplift writers because artists had an "easier" time getting recognition in the fandom. The reality is that she and her friends were just fucking bullies for no reason. Wicked and her friends would criticize people for everything and were incredibly condescending. They made fun of comments people left on their works and said people in the fandom were childish for preferring fluff and happy endings over themes of abuse.

Teaya was the only person in the server that ever made me feel welcome. She checked on me when she saw I wasn't engaging as much. She and I talked at length through DMs. We both felt like we weren't welcome there. She and I were the only women of color and we were regularly talked over or ignored. It was such a relief to have our feelings validated so we didn't feel like we were going crazy. We made a server for ourselves to write and share ideas freely with each other. It started off with just the two of us, but we invited a few more people, and the experience was like night and day! I finally felt like I found a community for myself.

One night, my friend still in Wicked's server told me they were really uncomfortable because the conversation revolved around the rape comic again. That was when I decided to leave the guild. I didn't think anyone would notice. EwwStuff reached out to me. When I explained myself, Eww's response was along the lines of, "It's nice that you left instead of trying to force people to censor themselves for you." I said I appreciated her checking on me but that I wasn't coming back. I was anxious about Wicked still following me on Twitter, but I didn't want to block her because I had a feeling she'd make a big deal about it.

And I was right. Not too long after that, I commented on some art of Don and said, "I don't have daddy issues so I'll pass, but have fun, y'all!" with a gif of someone throwing condoms. It was intended to be a joke. Wicked screenshotted my post and ran to the guild. She immediately told them that what I was doing was fucked up and all of them jumped in and agreed. People who I had chatted with amicably were all rallying against me. I joined chats and VCs with them sometimes. I shared advice, stories, I read their works and encouraged them. Suddenly all of them were tearing me down and no one had even asked me what my intentions were behind the post.

Wicked came at me by saying that it wasn't a joke, I was being a bully for assuming that people who liked Don had a daddy kink, and how I was NOT allowed to joke about ANYONE with a kink I didn't personally have myself. I find it funny now because she went from being incredibly offended by my harmless (albeit tasteless joke to befriending/encouraging people who harass others and regularly turn people's real trauma into a punchline.

During this time, I got supportive messages from a few people and one of them was a friend of Daoko. We began talking about my experience in the guild. Daoko's friend recognized some of the same abusive patterns of behavior that Wicked put them through for years. They introduced me to Daoko and that was when I was told that Wicked's husband sexually assaulted Daoko. The pieces came together and I was horrified and disgusted.

I lurked a lot on Wicked's server due to my anxiety, so I saw things that just struck me as odd. Wicked encouraged women to speak graphically about their fantasies/sexual experience. She described having amazing sex with her husband despite the fact that his social media posts said otherwise. I feel this was an attempt on Wicked's part to make him seem enticing to other women in the server who were dissatisfied with their current relationships.

In the rules, it was openly encouraged to discuss rape/noncon in any part of the server even though there was a sensitive topic channel. Wicked said it was because the game had "dark" content. I think she wanted to spin her interest in rape as purely a kink. That way if the truth ever got out about Daoko's assault, she could connect with people who would come to her defense with the age old, "fiction doesn't affect reality" argument. Her interest isn't just fictional. She helped her husband rape someone and is using the proship rhetoric to cover her ass.

When she talked about the allegations against Fuboo, she randomly said, "not all drunk sex is rape" and Shudder agreed. She enjoyed it when a member came on completely drunk and emotionally vulnerable/tearful, as if it was hilarious her friend was hammered enough to embarrass herself on a server full of strangers. I just found it obnoxious at the time, but now it's disturbing.

Daoko used alcohol to cope with the trauma of her assault. She showed up on the Malcontent server severely intoxicated. Instead of checking on her or muting her, the Malcontent admins and mod Wicked took Daoko to a private VC to ask her embarrassing questions and mock her. Wicked did this knowing exactly why Daoko was suffering in the first place.

Daoko's assault occurred just months before Wicked advertised the guild. Wicked never disclosed the fact that her husband, who was recently accused of raping someone she met on Discord, had access to her login, the server, and her private messages. She admitted to a friend in the past that he would sometimes impersonate Wicked to talk to other women.

Wicked even posted an unsolicited picture of her husband's genitalia for "drawing references" on the server. Spoilered or not, it's still sexual harassment. There are legit reference sites she could've used. She was fishing for compliments so he could read what these women thought of his junk. That's so violating.

The accusation that Daoko has been lying about her assault this entire time makes zero sense. Why would she ever put herself through the public humiliation of being judged by thousands of her peers by coming forward if it wasn't true? Why would she risk so much for me and my friends who were at the time total strangers to her? Can someone please tell me what reason I would have to orchestrate this entire thing? It's Occam's razor. The simplest answer to why I got involved is the best one: she's telling the truth.

If Wicked was innocent, she wouldn't have used alts to stalk/intimidate the people speaking up against her. She stole her victim's social media handle, I'm guessing to discredit/retract her posts about the assault. She gave away a witness's personal information to a friend so they could send the witness and their family a threatening letter.

Wicked has created a false narrative in which I'm the aggressor and she's the victim. She stalks my account despite being blocked. She mocks my physical appearance, sexually harasses me, and paints me as a conniving bitch trying to ruin her life. She accused me of putting a mole on her server even though it was literally a friend I had invited to feel less lonely. They weren't spying, they just gave me a heads up that she was talking negatively about me. Wicked crashed a mutual's Twitter space to rant and rave about how I was manipulating Teaya into turning her back on everyone in the guild. Her persistent harassment resulted in my friend being hospitalized for multiple suicide attempts. It's been months since I left my friends' servers and stopped paying attention to her unless my friends made it a point to tell me something directly. Yet she brings me up as a point of contention and tries to bait me into engaging with her.

I honestly can't blame her friends for dogpiling me. One of them messaged me privately and admitted that she's scared of Wicked. She said Wicked has a reputation for harassing people even in other fandoms, so she played along to avoid being made a target. I have a feeling that quite a few of her friends see exactly how batshit Wicked is, but they'd rather not say anything and risk incurring her wrath. That or they're purposefully encouraging her to have public meltdowns for their own amusement.

If you're second guessing your friendship with her, cut off contact. Make a clean break so she can't guilt trip you into staying. This was the only way her old friends could get away. If you're still engaging with her after all this, you are enabling her. You are not a good person. You know that. If your anxiety/depression is the worst it's ever been, this is partly why.

I'm sorry for how I acted when this all came out. It wasn't my place to force anyone into believing Daoko. I felt passionately about it because I didn't want it to happen to anyone else, not that it justifies my attitude. I understand a lot of you wanted to protect yourselves. I don't blame you considering what we've been through. It was also a hard lesson to learn that some people out there don't care or are just cruel. I should've left them alone instead of pushing. Besides, anyone who blames a rape victim or accuses them of lying isn't worth talking to.

Wicked has hated me so much from the very beginning. Out of everyone who's spoken out against her or spread information about what happened, she finds some way to pin the blame on me. For the longest time it bothered me. Now I know that if someone like her has a problem with me, then I'm clearly doing something right.

I'm healing from almost an entire year of her weird obsession with me. My fiancée, family, friends, boss, and even strangers have all helped me get through this. I've been exploring new ways to create, revisiting old fandoms, adjusting my psych meds, and seeing a therapist!

I'm archiving this account and pulling back from the community itself, but I'll still publish new works for everyone to enjoy. I may come back someday when I feel safe. Until then, I just... want to thank you all very much for all your support. My fandom buddies can always reach out to me so we can chat! I love you guys!

♡ Monica ☺